

A change of heart

Any religion which is honest with itself will occasionally reflect upon its prevailing values.

The moral worth of theology is usually revealed through the consequences of putting belief into practice. In the case of the life and death ethics of diet it can be observed that too much has been taken for granted for too long.

For in the U.K. alone, over 800 million animals experience the misery, violence and horror of slaughterhouse conditions each year. Whilst our infinitely benign Creator and the Lord of All Creation continue to bear the world's many manifestations of disgrace until the coming of their peaceable reign.

In its own, seemingly small way the vegetarian lifestyle offers a choice of Grace in our fallen world. Yet it is a diet which remains an affirmation of the Kingdom for which we pray.

And an acknowledgement that the cries of innocent animals may be heard; not only by their loving Creator but by the churches.

Let Christian love and compassion overcome an appetite which invariably demands the slaughter of other beings.
